Temporary Res.

Caxton Press.

New Delhi.

my dear Raza,

Till two hours ago I was worried that even my last letter to you had misfired. And then somebody from the office was good enough to run up to me at the press and passed on your letter of the 1st which had arrived here on the 3rd! In the meantime Parvathi, having found me entirely unreliable, unserviceable and hopeless, wrote to you directly I hope you've received it.

Now your letter and — ourselves. Please be as free as a bird. It does not matter when you are, when will be — you are always with me. Do drive to Bal's from the airport. I understand the situation fully. I will try to come to air post. via 'P'. but will I succeed?

'P' will not be able to go by himself.
I will 'hold on' till I meet you both.

I really can't write a long letter here. This catalogue - this ill-planned pick-me-up schedule has almost knocked me out. I am not myself - not much of a human being. I have almost become a computer. But then everything will be forgotten - all this travail and effort after the gas when the catalogue comes out.
Miracles are not remembered in the strong drink and heat of the day.

Love

Yours
C. W. C.

My dear Raza & Janine,

you would not know how I have passed some fifteen days, ever since I came to know that you had arrived in Bombay.

Padamsee told me of your arrival.

Then I thought you had been terribly busy and would write to as soon, and left the matter there. But I did not leave it there, for I have suffered as I have suffered never before thirsting for your letter. I could have written to you but, how impossible and unfair have I become under extreme pressure of and anxiety. So, I too imagined all sorts of things -- not always kind and fair, to you or to me both. I thought I had written some blunders in my last letter to you at Paris written in reply to yours wherein you had tentatively mentioned your departure for Bombay.

I have not been sure that you received it. And as for your letters from Paris again and Bombay -- most this happens we have lost them all, mislaid in transit.

Had it not been for my Losh we should have men to Bourday to meet you both.
But we will hold ourselves back — it is a just a week or 10 days.

I acknowledge this with just one time.

Telegram will Positively reach home parents

P.S. Your letter ~~has~~ not reached the new house.

A. write to the office. Would not miss your letter again.

Try the new address also — to get the postman used to our existence S.A.K. here.

for you & yours.

but now this post card
the jamine's party. read at the office. can you imagine how much it has cost my paper, ~~materials~~ other work materials. you would not understand you know how I have been having to realize the Triennale catalogue.

Hill with everything. you are there next door to you. But you will be here in a week's time.
that square up everything. jamine at you my, of course, most welcome. we will all join do the best to make ourselves comfortable.

I only ~~had~~ hope that you will find the house comfortable.
It is a ~~little~~ funny house, as we have been here only for two months. Tell me one thing, Puja. Do you intend working here, perhaps. We could try to do something for this.

Parvati is already planning a few changes in the house to make it more genuine & you. It shall be free, comparatively free, after the 5th or 6th.

My dear Raza & Janine,

We got your letter of last week, We are surprised and sorry we did not receive your letters from Paris & Bombay. May be, the Postman does forgot we have shifted to this house. ~~We~~ We were also thinking of you both everyday & were expecting your letter for a month or so. Thank God, at least this letter reached us.

We are very happy to ^{are at Bombay} know you will be arriving here by the 7th inst. We Welcome you most warmly.

Please let us know the day & time of your arrival here. We will meet you at the Railway Station or airport. I am sure, Janine, you will like Delhi now. The weather is still chilly.

Yes; ~~we~~ Krishnam sent a letter (express) 2 days ago. I presume you got it. Krishnam is very busy with the catalogue, journal etc.

We are eagerly awaiting your arrival.

you can write to us to
